Giuseppe Ripa

Italian photographer Giuseppe Ripa's 2005 "Anima Mundi" tracked the artist's 10-year photographic exploration of normal and religious websites round the world, reflecting at the common impulse to the transcendent from Tibet to Guatemala and Iceland to the Sahara. This new portfolio at the Buddhist ruins of Angkor, Cambodia supplies readers the sensation that they're confronting not only stones yet presences. there's an severe energy preserved within the tree roots which are sinking into those deserted temples, and the fragments of columns that block one course appear to recommend another, all underneath the numerous faces of Buddha, who seems to be on with an enigmatic smile from stone bas reliefs. This international has stored its secret for centuries, ready to bare itself to the sufferer visitor, one able to wait, able to reflect; Ripa is simply such an observer.
